About this pack

As a community based, not for profit organisation, The NSW Writers' Centre Inc (the Centre) is always interested in recruiting directors to its Board to govern its operations. The NSW Writers' Centre operates under the trading name Writing NSW.

Becoming a director is a rewarding experience and gives an opportunity to provide great benefits to the Centre and the writing community in general. The purpose of this information pack is to provide an overview of the roles and responsibilities of directors and to help potential members make an informed decision as to whether to nominate to be elected, or agree to be appointed.

Please note that this information pack is not legal advice, and the Centre will not be held liable for the correctness of any information contained herein. If you have any specific questions, you should seek professional legal advice.

What is the NSW Writers' Centre?

The Centre was incorporated as an association in 1991 and is governed by the Associations Incorporations Act 2009 (NSW). With around 2000 members, the Centre was established to promote writing based culture and support the interests of all writers. It operates as a vibrant cultural hub in historic Garry Owen House which is set in the grounds of Callan Park, Rozelle, in Sydney's Inner West.

Since May 2018 the Centre has operated under its business name Writing NSW.

Writing NSW currently has around 2000 members, who receive a number of benefits, including discounted or free access to courses and events, a subscription to the Centre's magazine, free use of rooms for writing or for writing group meetings (provided all members of the group are Centre members), access to member-only events and member-only programs such as the mentorship program and the annual Varuna fellowship, and discounted venue hire. Members are entitled to vote at general meetings and to stand for election to the Board, as set out in the Centre's constitution. Membership fees and conditions are set by the Board.

How do I become a director?

There are three ways to become a Board member:

1. Be elected at the Annual General Meeting (AGM) by the membership of the Centre, or
2. Fill a casual vacancy at the invitation of the Board, or
3. Be appointed for a fixed term

The constitution of the Centre currently provides for a minimum of three and a maximum of 12 directors. Six directors are appointed by the Board for up to a term of 24 months. Six directors are elected by the membership for a term of three years with a third required to stand for election at each AGM. However, where the number of elected directors is less than the number of vacant positions, the Board is empowered to co-opt a director to fill a casual vacancy until the date of the next AGM.

The Board encourages potential directors to become familiar with the membership and operation of the Board, to gain an appreciation of directors' duties and responsibilities, and to understand the level of commitment involved prior to nominating or accepting a position on the Board.

What does Writing NSW do?

Writing NSW is the state's premier organisation for writers, interacting with and providing services to thousands of writers each year and providing paid employment opportunities to around 300. It runs a lively and diverse program including:

Professional development for writers

Writing NSW offers approximately 90 courses, workshops and seminars each year, delivered by established writers and industry professionals. Courses range across genres and levels of experience, as well as covering skills such as marketing, ebook production and the business of being a writer. Writing NSW also runs an annual industry symposium, The Forest for the Trees, as part of the Sydney Writers' Festival.

Other services for writers

Writing NSW offers a number of other services for writers, including mentorships and manuscript assessments and acts as an information hub, providing advice about writing and publishing through its website and response to individual enquiries.

Festivals and events

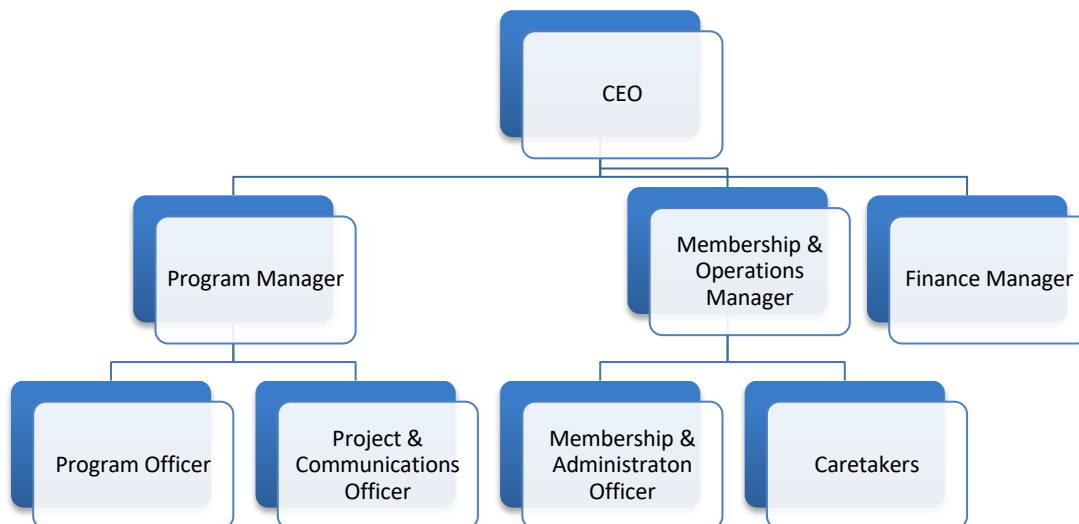

Writing NSW stages two festivals a year, on a two-year rotation, each curated by an established writer in the genre. Members receive discounted entry to festivals. Writing NSW also runs two regular monthly events, its First Friday club and the evening Talking Writing program. First Friday focuses on the writing and publishing industry and is a members-only morning tea at which staff members take turns to host a conversation with one or more invited guests. Guests may include writers, publishers, editors, agents, publicists or festival directors among others. Talking Writing events focus more on current themes or genres and often include a panel discussion and networking drinks.

Communications

Writing NSW engages with its members and broader constituency through a number of platforms, including its quarterly print magazine, Newswrite, weekly e-newsletter, Newsbite, and a strong presence in social media. Newswrite is currently edited by author Kirsten Krauth on a contract basis and includes paid contributions from leading Australian writers and industry figures. Writing NSW tweets as @writingnsw and has a presence on a number of social media platforms, including Facebook (<https://www.facebook.com/WritingNSW>).

Who runs Writing NSW?

Writing NSW's staff is responsible for all operational matters, under the leadership of the CEO, as shown in the diagram below. Writing NSW also offers internships, with two intakes per year. Interns generally work one day a week for a period of six months. A number of volunteers also contribute to Writing NSW operations.

Where does Writing NSW get its income?

Writing NSW has a turnover of about $ 900,000 each year, the majority of which comes from various grants, the NSW State Government through Create NSW, the Australia Council, revenue from writing programs, venue hire, festivals, memberships, and donations.

What is the role of the Board?

The Board is responsible for the governance of the Centre. This means ensuring that the Centre's funds are spent efficiently, ethically and in compliance with all relevant law. It also means ensuring that Writing NSW is sustainable, and will continue to deliver services through the development of strategies and continual assessment of its performance. It is the aim of the Writing NSW to be seen by funding bodies as professional, accountable, effective and fully compliant with the law. A separation of the management and governance roles within Writing NSW is fundamental to the achievement of this goal. The appointment of the CEO with day to day management responsibilities has worked extremely well, and leaves the Board free to consider broader issues and not get bogged down in day to day management decisions.

The Board acts on behalf of the members in overseeing Writing NSW. It has the responsibility to set the Writing NSW's direction and goals while the CEO is responsible for deciding how to achieve those goals.

The Board is required to:

- set and review medium and long-term goals
- approve the annual budget
- monitor performance
- approve major financial decisions
- evaluate CEO's performance
- ensure major risks are identified and managed
- ensure there is accurate financial reporting and legal compliance with all relevant legislation

All decisions are made collectively by the Board and all directors share equal responsibility for those decisions.

Are directors legally liable for the decisions they make?

YES. Members of an incorporated association can be held personally liable for the decisions they make. However instances of directors of not-for-profit organisations being sued are rare.

As a director of NSW Writers' Centre Inc., certain responsibilities are required pursuant to both common and statutory law. At common law, these duties are known as fiduciary duties due to the element of trust that is established between an association and its officers. As such directors have legal, ethical and professional responsibilities to act for the benefit of the Centre. This means they must ensure they carry out their fiduciary and statutory duties to the membership as a whole, not to one group of members or to one particular member.

What are the duties of a director?

Board members have a duty to:¹

- Represent the interests of all members
- Act in good faith in the best interests of the Centre
- Avoid conflicts of interests
- Not use inside knowledge they gain from being on the Board for personal gain
- Act with due care and diligence
- Not allow the Centre to enter into any debts that it may not be able to pay.

Do I receive any remuneration as a director?

NO. Board membership is an entirely voluntary position.

What core skills are important to the Board?

A Board works best when drawing on a wide spectrum of expertise. While a directors is not expected to be an expert in all areas, potential Board members should be able to contribute in one or more of the following areas:

- Strategic expertise
- Industry knowledge
- Financial skills
- Legal skills
- Managing risk
- Managing people

As a not-for-profit organisation funded through grants, sponsorship and by government, Writing NSW needs to be able to establish alternative sources of income to ensure that it remains financially viable in the years ahead. Therefore, all Board members, regardless of the particular skill they possess as outlined above, should be prepared to be involved in ensuring the long term sustainability of the organisation.

¹ Please note, this is a condensed summary only of the law, and not a full and complete statement of Board members' duties.

What personal qualities should a Director possess?

Personal qualities that are desirable in a Director are:

Honesty and integrity

The Board only operates effectively if there is trust between its members. Directors need to be able to raise and discuss matters in confidence in order to explore issues thoroughly and resolve them.

Courage and openness

A director must have the courage to question or speak up if they believe something is not right regarding an important decision, or to challenge the CEO if necessary.

Tact

Effective directors can work within a group and express a point of view or question forcefully, yet constructively.

Genuine interest

A genuine interest in the vision and goals of the Writing NSW and its operations is essential.

Energy and commitment

A good board member is an active contributor and team player who is prepared to do all the required homework before a Board meeting and sit on sub committees.

Some questions that you might consider in coming to a decision whether to seek a position on the Board are:

- Am I a strategic thinker?
- What skills do I have that would add value to the Board?
- Do I understand Writing NSW's operations?
- Can I work as part of a team?
- Do I have sound business instincts and judgment?
- Am I genuinely interested in Writing NSW, its operation, its staff and those it serves?
- Am I prepared to seek advice when in doubt?

What is expected of a director of the Board?

Each director is expected to:

- Attend and actively participate in bimonthly Board meetings which are held on the third Monday evening of the relevant month from 6.00 pm to approx. 8.30 pm
- Prepare fully for Board meetings by reading all Board papers prior to the meeting.

- Participate in sub committees as required
- Attend strategy days
- Attend major Writing NSW events
- Deal with “out of session” issues, usually by email
- Comply with the Board Code of Conduct
- Apply his or her individual skills for the benefit of the Writing NSW as required
- Represent Writing NSW to the broader community
- Actively encourage membership of Writing NSW
- Develop, organise and participate in significant fund raising
- Complete a Director’s eligibility and conflict of interest declaration each year

Who is eligible to become a director?

The rules for eligibility for membership of the Board are set out in the NSW Writers’ Centre Inc. constitution and the Associations Incorporations Act 2009 (NSW).

These requirements are:

- Be a financial member of Writing NSW
- Not be a staff member
- Not be bankrupt
- Not be convicted of a crime for which the maximum punishment is imprisonment for three months or more in the past five years
- Not have any conflicts of interest that would prevent the nominee from performing his or her duties as a Board member

What is the term for a director?

- If elected at an AGM, a director sits for a three year term.
- If co-opted, a director may hold office until the date of the next AGM.
- If appointed, a director holds office for the term set by the Board up to a period of 24 months.

How do I cease being a director?

There are several ways to cease being a Board member:

- Resignation
- Retirement at an AGM
- Becoming ineligible by virtue of the provisions of the Constitution or the Associations Incorporation Act 2009 (NSW)
- Be absent from three consecutive scheduled Board meetings without leave.

The Chair is happy to discuss specific issues about Board membership with any potential candidate. Find out more about the Centre at info@writingnsw.gov.au.
